INFANTICIDE.

A Young Unmarried Woman Horribly Murdered Her Legitimate Child.

Intelligence reaches us of a terrible crime committed in the early part of last week, in our neighboring county of Hardin, by a young unmarried woman named Susan Barker. It appears that the woman, who is in the neighborhood of twenty-six years of age, has been living in the family of a farmer, named Bishop, in the capacity of domestic, for several years past. She is said to be a person of good looks, and for the last two years has been the recipient of marked attention from a neighboring married farmer, by the name of Monk. It was the general belief of the community that the couple contemplated matrimony, a belief that was shared by the woman's employer.

Last Monday morning Miss Barker went into a strip of woods near the house, ostensibly to pick up wood for the fire, a proceeding that astonished her mistress, as there was a generous supply of fuel at the wood pile near the door. After an absence of some half an hour, she returned with her arms full of wood, which she hung upon the hearth, exclaiming at the same time that she felt sick and weak, and believed that she would go to her room and lie down awhile. Mrs. Bishop, who was watching for some time, has since suspected that everything was not altogether right with Susan, insisted upon her husband going out to the woods where the girl got the wood and see if something had not transpired there. He did so, and after a brief search found, covered with a heap of chips and leaves, the body of a newborn infant. His little head was beaten about to a jelly, and its tender throat cruelly lacerated by the hand of its slayer. Strangers to say, the hapless mother was still breathing when found, but she died before she could be taken to the hospital.

The neighbors have been placed under arrest, and her examining trial, or information, was set for Monday of this week. Intense excitement pervaded the community in which this atrocious crime was committed, and the feeling against Monk, whom the women accused of being her seducer and the father of the child—is no lighter as to be uncomfortable, and his flight would not surprise any one.

Last week it was the Grand Jury that troubled the boys. Now it is the road overseers. So it seems, they can't be happy.

We have been searching for that "newly letter" up one column and down another, but have been unable to find it. Perhaps it was in the advertisement—we did not look there—but we are rather loath to believe—now, Mr. Editor, would you please jokingly—Jacques.
